Presentation

This Spring School aims to be an innovative capacity building on Communication and Culture for Social Change (CC4SC) for M.A. and Ph.D. students, young researchers, and humanitarian and development workers. Practitioners are often not connected to contemporary academic thought. Academicians are often not connected to projects on the ground. This disconnection represents a lost opportunity in that its main authors believe that the theory itself can contribute to practical social change. In this course, academic discussions will be adapted to match practitioners' needs, and project presentations will be adapted to match academicians' lacks on what is happen in the field.
