Presentation

Digital transformation is redefining the way people communicate, access services, and participate in society. However, many older adults continue to face barriers that limit their inclusion and digital citizenship. This microcredential equips professionals to design, implement, and evaluate innovative interventions to promote digital literacy among older adults, using participatory methodologies, intergenerational learning, digital storytelling, gamification, and the critical use of digital technologies. The training program integrates scientific knowledge with practical application, promoting the development of impactful projects in community settings and contributing to more active, autonomous, and inclusive aging.
