Presentation

The Graduate Program in Teaching Portuguese as a Non-Native Language in Multilingual Contexts addresses the challenges posed by the growing linguistic and cultural diversity in Portuguese schools, where teaching Portuguese as a non-native language is now widespread. The diversity of linguistic backgrounds, proficiency levels, and school experiences requires skills that go beyond traditional language instruction. This graduate program prepares teachers to assess students¿ linguistic profiles and needs, plan differentiated instruction strategies, develop teaching materials, evaluate student learning, and promote students¿ integration into the school and the community. Grounded in recent research and featuring a strong practical component, it addresses the challenges of multilingual educational contexts.
